1. To make well-thought-out planning and land-use decisions that will create a thriving environment where people will live, work, and play.
2. To pool the necessary resources that will effectively address planning and land-use issues on a broader scale that individual local units of government could not otherwise manage on their own.
3. To designate the most efficient and logical land uses that will allow the entire region to have access to public services, jobs, and natural resources.
